The Mystery, Inc. gang was having a picnic on the beach. They heard a story on the radio.

Three prize dogs had been dognapped! A strange, ghostly miner was suspected of the crime.

Buck Masters, the owner of one of the dogs, was offering a reward.

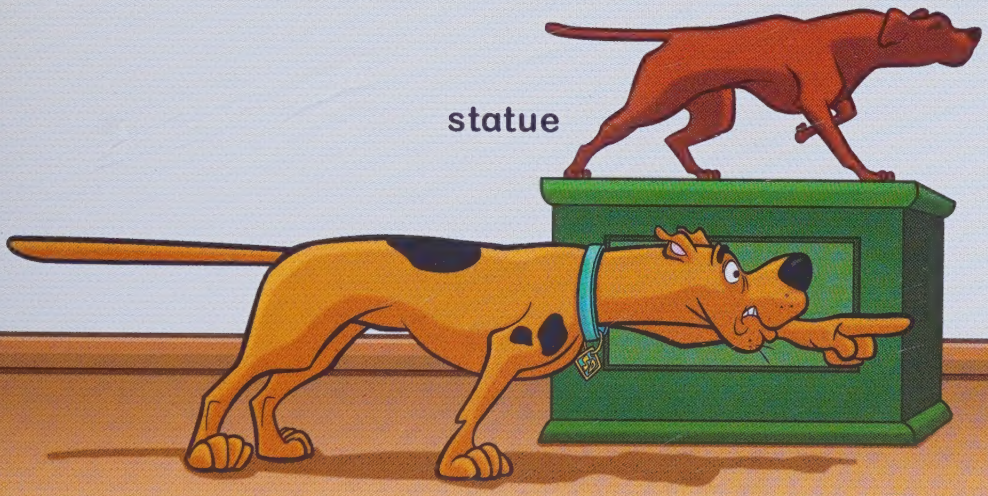
The gang went to visit Buck Masters.

"My dog was sure to win first prize at the County Dog Show," he told them. "But now, my neighbor's Great Dane will win... unless he gets dognapped!"



Shaggy asked, "Does anyone have an idea?" Fred had an idea. The gang would give the dognappers a decoy . . . Scooby!

Then, when they grabbed the decoy, the gang would trail them to their hideout.

The gang put a transmitter on Scooby's collar, so they could track him. Shaggy and Scooby walked down the street.

Suddenly, a truck let out a cloud of black smoke.

Shaggy coughed. Scooby's leash was empty.

"Oh no!" Shaggy cried, "They've grabbed Scooby!"

Back in the Mystery Machine, Velma watched the transmitter on Scooby's collar. It was moving very quickly. Shaggy said, "Let's go!"

The dognappers found Scooby. "This mutt is a phony!" cried the ghostly miner. He sent Scooby down the railroad on a hand cart.

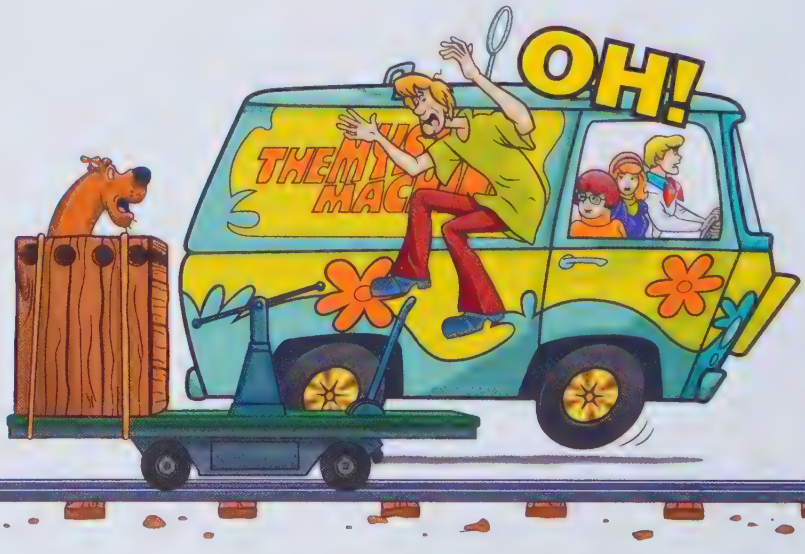
"Hey! That was Scooby!" Shaggy said. "Hang on, Scooby! We'll save you!"

Scooby was racing right into the path of a train! Shaggy jumped onto the hand cart to save him.



Fred switched the track and the train rolled by safely.

"This looks like an old mining camp," said Shaggy. "I'll bet we'll find those stolen dogs here."

"If that ghost miner doesn't find us first!" said Shaggy.

"Zoinks!" cried Shaggy, "It's the miner! Run!"

Scooby and Shaggy found the stolen dogs and set them free.

The dogs ran the miner up a pole. His ghost mask fell off. It was Buck Masters! He had stolen the other dogs so he could win first prize at the dog show!

"Why didn't you kids mind your own business?" asked Buck Masters.

"Catching dognappers is our business," said Shaggy. "After all, Scooby is a dog, and we love him very much!"
